To all:

Whew... there were a lot of puns in this manga, and most importantly, I think the author's playing with his words and drawings at the same time. There is a oneshot out there, if it helps, you might wanna go and read it. It helps to understand this story a little wee bit better. And yes, you can pull multiple meanings from this manga, I guess the best meaning will only unveil as the story unfolds, so stay with us till the next chapter comes along [this manga is a quarterly]. :)

And now, glossary + reference time [yay. Yes, I'm a nerd].

- p.158

Orpheus:

Orpheus was a born musical genius. His music touched the animate and the inanimate. He and his wife, Lyra fell in love because of his music. During the wedding, Lyra was bitten by a poisonous snake. Orpheus loved her so much that he rushed to the underworld to save her. He used music and touched Hades, Hades agreed to revive his wife, with the condition that he doesn't turn around as they head back to the human world. As they were about to land the human world, he turned around, his actions impelled Lyra into the infinite darkness of hell. With such sadness, he wandered into the wilderness of the woods and was killed by some crazy women. They beheaded him, yet even after death, he kept on mouthing his wife's name. His harp then became a harp in the sky, later known as the constellation Lyra.

- page 159

Bacchus:

Bacchus is the god of wine. He has the power of making people drunk and he brings forth happiness and laughter to the world. He is one of the most beloved gods in Greek's culture. According to Greek mythology, he is a rumoured son of Zeus. Bacchus was always running and hiding from Hera's (Zeus' wife, Queen of all Gods) assassinations. As he was running away from place to place, he taught farmers how to make wine. Farmers began to worship Bacchus for teaching them how to make wine as well as bring happiness to them.
